sense of the word he usually lands the purse.

Still Sullivan has a chance. The wise ones are asking each other if it will be another case of "Corbett-McGovern."

When Corbett, a bristling son of Denver, went East to fight McGovern his chances were scoffed at. The wise ones did not figure him to have a look-in. All the tasent's money went on McGovern.

But when Corbett stripped for action in that memorable Hartford, Conn., strugge he displayed a torso that for grace, speed and punishing power was seldom equaled by a light man in the ring.

McGovern shook hands with Corbett and he was practically a prohibitive favorite. It was a case of write your own ticket. Still this chubby boy from Denver came out with colors flying, while McGovern went down to defeat for the first time in his brilliant ring career.

And some ring followers think that the Sullivan-Britt night will be a repetition of the McGovern-Corbett affair. But to the critical observer it looks like Britt should be the victor.

Britt is in excellent condition. His trainers declare him ready for the tap of the gong.

Jimmy has two chances to win against

Jimmy has two chances to win against Suilivan's one. The boy from the mission can win over the knock-out route, for Britt has been known to deliver a sleep-producing punch. It the fight goes the limit it is a cinch that the experience and ring generalship of Britt will wan for him. It is hard to give to Suilivan a look-in over the man that defeated the hard-hitting "Willie" Fitzgerald, the scientific punishing Martin Canole and the clever Frank Erne.

Still strange things have harmoned and Still strange things have happened, and if Sullivan lands the knock-out wallop on Britt it will not be altogether unlooked Already there is talk of a frame-up. Tom Corbett, one of the ablest judges Tom Corbett, one of the ablest judges of fighters in the country, writing from the scene of action, declares both boys to be in the pink of condition, and he gives it as his opinion that white Suilivan will give to Britt a hard fight the Caiffornia man will win.

Sullivan has performed some clever fighting stants. He has walloped his trainers and knocked out three or four sparring partners, but then he will be up against the real thing when he meets Britt.

The Washington scrapper's best work was against Eddie Hanion and Battling Nelson. He gave to both of these boys a hard clouting but the chances are that Nelson was not the real "Battling Dane" when he faced Sullivan. And no one claiming ring knowledge ever put Hanion in Britt's class.
